FOREWORD

Any language inevitably is influenced by the "consumer", the human beings who actually give it life by using it every day. It follows that no language can be entirely static and will change over the years. All we have to do is compare the English of the King James Version and Shakespeare with the printed word as we see it spread before us in the press and advertising of our own times to realize this self evident fact.

No sensible person would wish American English to become a dead and static instrument that did not reflect realities of American living in 1964. Nevertheless, it does not necessarily follow that all popular changes in our manner of speaking and writing are good ones because they are popular. As soon as the element of a reasoned and reasonable discipline in any human activity is removed, chaos is bound to result. This is just as true of language as it is in education, the Armed Forces or in the problem of how to restrain and guide the new found energies of Adolescents.

These observations of the Cataloguer were inspired by a very minor linguistic change he felt obliged to introduce into this catalogue. It had long been our custom to indicate that a coin is illustrated by the addition of the word PLATE to the description of the piece. All those interested in coins are being constantly made aware of the "thousands of new Collectors" who have recently entered the market. While there may be no connection between these new "Collectors" and the confusion which the word PLATE seems to have aroused, we must say that the misunderstanding is a fairly recent phenomenon. With our perhaps old fashioned attitudes in these matters, it is hard for us to realize how it is possible for anyone not to grasp that "a plate", as used in connection with any publication, is an illustration and has nothing whatever to do with a plated coin. Nevertheless, it appears that many readers have fallen into just such an error. This involves a change in the language all right, but a restrictive change for the worse based on a contraction of the average vocabulary. Rather than argue the point, for the time being we have resorted to the word PHOTO. While "Illustrated" would be more accurate, the shorter word has been chosen to save space.

The First Session of this Sale contains a mixed group of Consignments which cover a broad field of Numismatic interest. The offering of European and Oriental Gold Coins includes some fine pieces as well as many things likely to appeal to the man who cannot spend lavishly. There is also an exceptionally interesting run of Historical Medals and a fine lot of Ancient Greek, Judean and Roman coins. This session comes to a close with the first part of a large consignment of U. S. material.

The Second Session continues with the U. S. coins. There are many useful types and varieties to be found, although no great rarities.. Next comes the first group of Canadian Paper Money we have had the privilege of including in one of our Sales. The paper is followed by Canadian Decimal Coins, a few of which are of great interest. Among them will be found an Uncirculated 1920 Half Dollar and a 1937 Specimen Set, in card case of issue.

Note: The Bombay Mint has engaged in extensive restriking of the old British Indian coinage from William IV to George VI, in gold, silver and copper. The gold specimens are generally reddish in color; do not resemble the 2 tone originals but they are polished, like modern U. S. Proofs; are generally struck with rusty dies. These latter characteristics also apply to the silver and copper restrikes now available on the U. S. market.
